

You found the following story in a blog written by one of your classmates at school.

My First Tamale

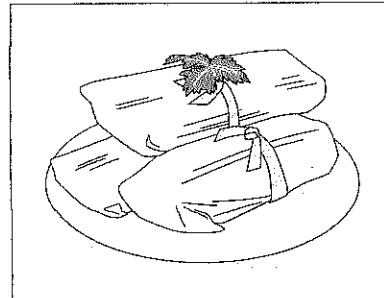

Wednesday, March 17

"You've never eaten tamales?" asked my friend Ana. "Then we're going this weekend! I know a great restaurant."

Last Saturday, we visited 8th Street around noontime. We saw Mexican and Central American restaurants that served different kinds of food. The stores there sold piñatas, toys, clothing, and CDs of music from Mexico. Then we saw one restaurant with a really long line.

"That's how you know it's a good place," said Ana. We waited for 20 minutes to order, but we didn't mind. It was a nice day, and we enjoyed talking and people-watching.

When we got our food, I took a picture of my plate. Then I picked up a tamale to take a bite. But Ana stopped me. "No, you have to unwrap it first!" she said, laughing. Each tamale was wrapped in a corn leaf, but I didn't know you couldn't eat the leaf!

We tried chicken and vegetable tamales. They were delicious! I was hungry, so I finished all of the tamales on my plate! Ana took one of hers home to eat later.

I want to go back with Ana to try more tamales. The restaurant also serves tamales with pork and chilies!

5

10

15

20

問 1 At the restaurant, the writer of this blog 16.

- ① disliked having to wait a long time to order
- ② had to be told the right way to eat a tamale
- ③ wanted to try another restaurant on 8th Street
- ④ was unhappy there were no pork tamales

問 2 You learned that the writer of this blog 17.

- ① ate three chicken and vegetable tamales and plans to return
- ② bought a CD of Mexican music and took one tamale home
- ③ preferred the pork and chili tamales to the chicken tamales
- ④ waited in line but could only eat two of her tamales

You found a story on a blog on the Internet about exchange programs.

Exchange Program Report

Dang Chooyat

I recently went to America on an exchange program. I'm from Thailand. I wanted to improve my English because when I used English with visitors to my city, I felt very nervous. So, I searched for an exchange program. I also phoned a friend to ask for advice. She said, "Go to America!" After my parents said OK, I used my savings to help get the airplane tickets. I couldn't wait to go!

When I got to America, it was different from what I had expected. Because the town was in New York State, I thought I would be in a big city. But it was actually very small. There wasn't much to do, and it was very cold. My host family was great, though. They knew I was sad and tried to cheer me up. On my first night we had pizza and stayed up late watching American action movies.

The next day I went skiing. I had never been skiing and was a little nervous. My host family gave me warm clothes and skis. I told them I would just watch as I might fall behind, and it wouldn't be fun for good skiers like them. They said I didn't need to worry, so I gave it a try.

The next day I went to high school. My first class was English. The teacher gave us new words to memorize. Later, the teacher said to give a speech in front of the class. When it was my turn, I did my best and the whole class clapped and cheered. I felt great and thought that I should be brave and talk to people in English whenever I could. That's what I do, and I am a better person now. Staying in America was a wonderful experience!

5

10

15

20

問 1 According to the story, Dang's feelings changed in the following order:

18

- ① nervous → disappointed → excited → anxious → happy
- ② nervous → disappointed → happy → excited → anxious
- ③ nervous → excited → disappointed → anxious → happy
- ④ nervous → excited → happy → disappointed → anxious
- ⑤ nervous → happy → anxious → excited → disappointed
- ⑥ nervous → happy → excited → anxious → disappointed

問 2 Dang did not want to ski because he might

19

- ① be slow
- ② get too cold
- ③ injure himself
- ④ look bad

問 3 From this story, you can understand that Dang

20

- ① discovered that it was better to focus on what he was good at
- ② found that if he tried his best, he could gain confidence
- ③ learned that studying a lot was the only way to be successful
- ④ realized that pretending to do something well could impress others